A MODERN MOM'S GUIDE TO BIRTHDAY PARTIES

by Sara Kendall

Birthday parties today can be simple, at-home affairs or more elaborate themed celebrations at a special venue. Modern moms can create the party they – and their child – want, but all choices have pros and cons. Here's what to consider when choosing what's best for your family and budget.

● PAPER INVITES OR EVITE

Paper invitations are classic and memorable, while evites are all the rage in our technology-fueled world. Paper invitations add a personal touch to an upcoming event, make an excellent keepsake item, but are not low-cost.

Evites and other digital invitations are gaining in popularity and most are free to send by simply signing up – all you need is the recipients' email addresses.

● HOME PARTY OR PARTY VENUE

By hosting your child's birthday party in your home, you have complete control – no guest count limits, time or date restrictions. Hosting at home may be less expensive, but it involves more work for you. Food, decorations, activities and entertainment will fall on your to-do-list, and don't forget about the tons of cleaning, before and after the party.

Choosing a party venue usually takes only a telephone call or two to take care of most of the work, but can come with a price tag.

"I am a huge fan of holding birthday parties at a venue verses my home. One of the biggest factors for me is I feel it allows me to really experience the party with my kids and be in the moment with them verses worrying about all the details," says Amy Horner, mom of two. "Having a party coordinator with you takes the pressure off you trying to be Mom and a party hostess."

● CHARITABLE GIVING

One trend is opting for a party that benefits a charity, and decorating along that theme. Some families collect food for a food pantry, toy donations for children's hospital, or pet food for an animal rescue organization or shelter. Older children might invite their friends to a service day to benefit a charitable organization.

● NO GIFTS, PLEASE

Some parents may choose a "no gifts" party because their child already has many toys and space in their home is limited. Sometimes that choice is in consideration for other parents – those $10 or $20 gifts start to add up when kids go to multiple parties in a year.

● TRADITIONAL CAKES, CAKE POPS OR DOUGHNUT CAKES

Serving a traditional cake is a statement piece especially when made to convey the birthday theme, but it can also be expensive. Some parents spend less on the decorations and put more money into a large cake, which becomes the centerpiece of the party.

These days, parents have become more mindful of serving reasonably sized sugary treats, and that's where cake pops come in. Cake pops are small-portioned treats on a stick making them a big hit with the kids.

Doughnut cakes are a new twist on the cake scene; a couple of dozens doughnuts arranged in a fun way makes for an easy cake, saving on time and money.

If your child is old enough, ask which option he or she would prefer.

● TO OPEN GIFTS OR NOT

Some parents feel it would be more polite to open gifts. Others think it puts more emphasis on the gifts rather than the focus on the party. The advantage of opening presents teaches children to be gracious, but opening them after the party takes the pressure off children who are unable to express proper gratitude or hide disappointment.

● THANK YOU NOTES

Many parents are firm believers in thank you notes, to teach kids to be gracious and polite and even to hone writing skills. Other parents may feel a note attached to a goodie bag, thanking kids for coming to the party, or a personal thank you from the child as guests leave the party, is sufficient.
